FIRST ACM/IEEE NEXT G SUMMIT

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY APPLIED PHYSICS LAB, USA

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 2022

SCOPE

Since the launch of Second-Generation Networks (2G), there has been an evolution of next generation of networks every decade. The research and standardization for each future mobile service was initiated many years before its commercial launch. In 2019, 5G Networks began to be deployed commercially after almost ten years of planning. Similarly, the race for the 6G wireless networks that will be operational in 2030 has already started. To fulfill its potential in the upcoming decade, 6G will undoubtedly require an architectural orchestration based on the amalgamation of existing solutions and innovative technologies. Several standards bodies including 3GPP, ITU, IEEE, Next G Alliance and various research projects around the world are working towards evolution of next generation of network.

The upcoming ACM/IEEE Next G Summit is the first one in the series, and will be held at Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Lab. This one day summit will provide a platform for the industry leaders, innovators, and researchers from the industry and academic community to collaborate and exchange ideas in this emerging technology that may help in driving the standards and rapid deployment.
